Almost a third (32%) of those who've never donated say it's because they think too much money goes into administration, rather than directly towards the causes themselves. A large portion of this group of non-donors have never donated because they can't afford to (29%). (YouGov)

(UK) Fast food chain KFC launched a completely vegan "Imposter Burger" this week, which customers will be able to trial for the next month at 20 restaurants, mostly in London and Bristol. McDonald's now sells vegetable wraps, Byron Burger offers vegan options and Greggs has enjoyed great success with its meat-free sausage rolls. Data shows that just 1% of the UK eschew meat and dairy but that there are geographic and demographic hotspots. For instance, 3% of women aged from 18 to 34 year are vegan. We've also found that 2% of current meat eaters plan to become vegan in the next 12 months. (YouGov)

No dogs at work, say two thirds of Brits

Across all age groups, the majority say canine friends should be kept at home.

Dogs may be a man's best friend, but does that mean they should be trotting along to the office with you every day?

More and more workplaces are adopting 'dog-friendly policies'. And once a year on 'Bring Your Dog To Work Day', a nationwide campaign encourages dog owners to bring their four-legged friend into the office.

But a new YouGov survey for the Yahoo / YouGov "Britain Is A Nation Of..." podcast shows that the idea of canine colleagues has yet to win over people's hearts: as many as two thirds of your workmates are secretly wishing you'd left the pup at home.

Two thirds of Britons say dogs don't belong in the workplace

Two thirds of Brits think employees should not be allowed to bring dogs into the workplace. One in four (23%) don't have an issue with it. The rest (12%) don't know.

Don't bring your dog to work, two thirds of Britons say

Excluding service animals (e.g. guide dogs), do you think employees should generally be allowed to bring pet dogs into the workplace? %

YouGov | yougov.com

21 - 22 February, 2019

Women are slightly more likely than men to think dogs should be allowed in the workplace: 27% say so compared to 19% of men. 70% of men saying they should not be allowed compared to 60% of women.

Young people are significantly more likely to think the workplace should be doggie-friendly - but even then, the no's outweigh the yes's by a large amount. A third (35%) of 18-24s think dogs should be allowed, while half (50%) say they should not.

Among those aged 55 and above, less than one in five (17%) think dogs should be allowed.
