Gilani's Gallopedia is a weekly Digest of Opinions in a globalized world - one window on global opinion polling compiled by Gilani Research Foundation

Who are we?

Gilani's Gallopedia is a weekly digest of opinions in a globalized world. It provides a one window access to Global Opinion Polls on a weekly basis. It is produced by a team of researchers led by Dr. Ijaz Shafi Gilani, and is a not for profit public service. It is co-edited by Mohammad Zubair and Sara Salam.

Our name reflects the rapid pace at which global polls are brought to the community of pollsters and other interested readers. Gilani's Gallopedia is not related to any polling agency and makes its selection from any publically available poll based on its relevance to our reader's interests. Over the years it has reported polls conducted by over 350 agencies and institutions.

April 2013

Police and Parliament are least trusted by Indians.

That Indians don't trust government is not a surprise. What comes as a surprise, as shown by Governance Now-Team C Voter survey, is the intensity of the feeling. Government is much less trusted than any private institution, even the private hospitals.

In a Governance Now-Team C Voter survey conducted in February 2013, people expressed their disdain for the police. The survey was conducted among 97,067 people from 2010 to 2012. Of the 17 institutions surveyed for their trust quotient with the citizens, police ended up at the bottom of the heap. Police is the least trusted public institution of the country. Out of every 100 respondents only 19 said they had a lot of trust in the police, 40 said they had some trust and 39 said they had no trust at all in the police. That gave the police a 'net' trust score of just 20.

That is, only one in five persons trusts the police.

The police's net trust score is about two-and-a-half times less than its nearest low-scoring institution, the parliament. With a net trust score of just 50 percent, the parliament is the bottom of the trust ladder with police. Thirty-three percent respondents said they had full trust in parliament, 39 percent had some trust and 22 percent said they had no trust at all in parliament giving it a net trust score of just 50 percent. Now that is no good news for the Indian democracy.

In fact, all six government institutions are bunched at the end, making up ranks 12 to 17!

Rank numbers 1 to 11 belong to institutions that are independent of the government. The list includes NGOs, Election Commission and courts. The armed forces also enjoy the trust of people the most. It has a net trust score of 93%. Universities rank second with net trust score of 84%. The media scores a net of 82% making it the third most trustworthy institution in the country. The other high ranking institutions are – NGOs (75%), Election Commission (73%), labour unions (73%), religious institutions (71%), private schools (70%), private hospitals (68%), Courts (65%) and private industry (64%). Government schools (62%), government industry (61%), state governments (54%), and government hospitals (53%) are among the least trusted institutions.

It is a mark of how low the stock of governments and government institutions is that government schools score the highest rank (12) in the public institutions space. It suggests a dangerous disconnect between governments and the people because of poor governance.

This survey, we do acknowledge, is not comprehensive. Many key institutions such as CBI, CVC, CAG, our bureaucracy and political parties, have been out of the purview of the survey. They will be covered next year.

Perhaps this survey shows unambiguously is where we should begin the reforms, if we want to reform.
