In Brazil, Most Internet Users Are Women

53% of the population accessed the web at least once a month in the last three months

In Brazil, women outnumber men on the internet. According to a survey by IBOPE Intelligence, 53% of internet users in the country are women and 47% men. In total, 53% of the population accessed the web at least once a month in the last three months.

By class, according to the update of the Economic Classification Criteria Brazil, a model that economically ranks the Brazilian population, in force since January 1 this year, the class A, which represents only 2% of the population, has 4% of users Internet country, while most concentrated in classes B (34%) and C (52%). On the other hand, the class D / E represent 21% of the population, but only meet 10% of Internet users. Still, it means that one in five people in classes D / E accesses the internet.

According to research, the Brazilians aged between 35 and 54 years are the ones that access the Internet. They represent 34% of total accesses in the country, followed by young people 25-34 years (32%) and 16-24 years (28%). On the other hand, the population over 55 has not fallen on the network, it represents only 7% of Brazilian Internet.

The most connected region of the country is the Southeast, which concentrates 49% of those who access the Internet. The Northeast has 22% of Internet users in Brazil, followed by the South (14%), Midwest (8%) and North (7%).

The survey also reveals that half of the country's Internet users completed high school, a rate above the average of the Brazilian population, which is 37%. Customers who have higher education also appear in greater proportion than the population: 29% of Internet users have completed tertiary education, while the total population of the country this figure is 17%. On the other hand, Internet users who have studied up to primary education are a minority in the network (20%), but most in the country (45%).

When taken into account the penetration of the internet, 90% of those with tertiary course have internet access, a percentage that drops to 71% among those with high school and 24% for those with only primary education.

The survey was conducted between July and December 2014 with the population above 16 years.
